

Dr. Atieno Mboya teaches International Environmental Law, Law Sustainability and Development, and Law and Vulnerability at Emory University in Atlanta. She holds a Master of International and Comparative Law from Georgetown University Law Center and a Doctor of Juridical Science (Climate Change and Gender) from Emory Law School. She has worked in Kenya, Botswana and in Washington DC on issues relating to law and development, gender and children's rights. She was a winner of a MacArthur Foundation Fellowship through which she researched the role of law-related education in promoting transitions to democracy in South Africa. From March 1 to July 31, 2021, she will be a Fulbright Fellow at Parklands Law School in Nairobi. Her current research and writing focuses on human vulnerability, gender and the environment.